

Top Telemarketing Tips

Telemarketers, whether legitimate or scammers have been an issue for consumers for years. Unethical telemarketers call every day trying to sell you something, get your personal information, charge your credit card, or take your money.

Following are the top ten things to know about telemarketing and ways to steer clear of unethical telemarketers and reduce irritating phone calls:

Some telemarketing calls are exempt.

Some telemarketing calls may be from legitimate telemarketers that are legally calling your home.

- Calls from non-profit organizations asking for a donation.
- Calls made by an individual acting on his or her own behalf.
- Collection calls.
- Political, poll or survey calls.
- Calls a business makes to current clients. The business may not solicit a new product or service.
- Calls made in response to your verbal or written consent or request.

Drawings, sweepstakes, and raffles all lead to solicitations.

If you plan to enter any kind of sweepstakes, raffle or drawing, such as for a new car in a shopping mall, be aware that many of these contests take your personal information and give it to telemarketers who will solicit you. Even something as simple as throwing your name and phone number into a drawing at a grocery store may lead to hundreds of unwanted phone calls.

Always be aware of where you are and who you are dealing with before providing your personal information.

Foreign sweepstakes and lotteries are illegal.

When someone calls from out of the country and says you have won some money, it is a scam! Many of these calls actually come from Jamaica which is recognizable by area code 876. These people are trying to get your personal information to make unauthorized withdrawals on your bank accounts or credit cards. Ignore all of these solicitations and do not give out any of your personal information. Just hang up!

Do not provide personal information to online or email solicitations.

If you get an email or pop-up message while you are online that asks for financial or personal information, do not reply or click on the link in the message. Legitimate companies are not going to ask for this information on the Internet or through email. These types of pop ups and emails often lead to solicitations from illegitimate companies.

Credit card companies are never going to call to lower your interest rate.

Scammers obtain information about credit cards such as the last four digits of the credit card numbers. Then they call offering lower interest rates if you provide additional personal information. Legitimate credit card companies never contact you directly over the phone offering lower interest rates. If a telemarketer calls offering lower interest rates, protect yourself by hanging up immediately. Attempting to stop the calls by pushing a button or speaking to someone will only result in more calls.

A legitimate business is not going to make repeated telephone calls.

A legitimate company is not going to make harassing phone calls in order to obtain information from you. They will call once, and leave a message if it is essential that you call them back. If you find yourself getting repeated phone calls, ask for the caller's name and company, and if they do not give you any information, report them to the Bureau of Consumer Protection.

No legitimate telephone solicitor asks for your personal information over the phone.

A legitimate company is not going to call you to ask for your credit card information, bank account information, date of birth, or social security number. The only time they will ask you for this information is to verify your account when you call them.

If the caller asks for payment using wire or money transfers, asks you to obtain any kind of pre-paid money card such as loadable debit or credit card, or a gift card – HANG UP! This is illegal under federal law.

What to do if you receive a telemarketing call and you want to figure out who is calling.

The first thing to do if you receive a telemarketing call is to check your Caller ID. If the company is not hiding anything, their number and name will show up. If you can get their number, search the Internet for information or complaints about the number. If you still have no luck, file a complaint with the Bureau of Consumer Protection. Also be aware that many scammers may use technology called "spoofing" where they can control what shows up on your Caller ID. They can make it look like the call is from some known company or even from a neighbor. If you do not recognize the number on the Caller ID, it is best not to answer the phone and let the caller leave a message on your voicemail or answering machine.
